TERRIFIC BOMB EXPLOSION DEMOLISHES HOME OF J. M. DI SILVESTRO, PROMINENT ITALIAN NATIONAL HEAD, SONS OF ITALY

Six Sleeping Occupants Buried Under Ruins of Dwelling — Attorney's Wife Still Missing — Di Silvestro Returned Shortly After Explosion — One of Foremost Leaders of Italians in United States

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 28.—(INS)—A terrific bomb explosion early today demolished the home of John M. Di Silvestro, prominent Italian attorney and America Fascist leader, burying its six sleeping occupants in the ruins.

Several hours later, Di Silvestro's wife, Elizabeth, 45, was still missing. She was believed to be dead and still buried under the shattered wreckage of the house.

The prominent attorney's secretary, Mario Guarino, and four of his children, Helen, 14; Nita and Gloria, 11-year-old twins, and Arnold, 19, were extricated from the wreckage and taken to St. Agnes Hospital. They were suffering cuts, bruises, shock and possible internal injuries.

Di Silvestro himself escaped the infernal blast. He arrived home from a visit with friends just a few minutes after his home fell in shambles.

The Italian attorney was one of the foremost leaders of his nation in this country. He is national president of the Sons of Italy.

It was the second time Di Silvestro's home was bombed in the past six years. He was on the verge of collapse as rescuers burrowed into the wreckage, seeking his wife.

Police at once blamed anti-fascists for the bombing. Di Silvestro had incurred the enmity of many anti-fascists because of his pacifistic leanings and preachings against violence, police said.

The explosion terrified the neighborhood. The house of Dr. Anthony Luisi, adjoining, was virtually wrecked. Most of the other houses nearby were damaged. Scores of windows were broken.

Personal representation from Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy was often ascribed to Di Silvestro. He and his family had just returned Thursday from a four months' trip to their native land. It was believed the death plotters awaited their return.

Rosalie, 19; Yolanda, 16; and John, Jr., 16, escaped the fate of their family, because they are in Florence, Italy, attending school.

Firemen clearing away the wreckage found the bed in which Mrs. Di Silvestro was sleeping when the blast let go shortly before 2 o'clock this morning. There was no trace of the body.

The Italian consul here, Mario Pio Margiotti, arrived on the scene personally to offer his sympathies and aid. Telegrams from other prominent Italian leaders throughout the nation poured in.

Scores of occupants of nearby houses were treated for cuts, bruises and shock. Many of them were hurt by the flying debris. Others were bruised as the plaster walls and ceilings of their homes fell in pieces in the swaying of the blast.

Di Silvestro's brother, Anthony, was founder and editor of "Il Popolo," a Fascist newspaper. Anthony's son, John, who became the editor at his father's death, is now in charge of the paper.

The thoroughness with which the house was razed led detective to believe that the bomb may have been planted in the cellar.

"From what I have seen and been able to find out," said Lieut. Harry Clark, detective chief, "this is the work of anti-fascists. I am told they have been plotting something like this against Di Silvestro for some time."

Di Silvestro was head of the committee which entertained Foreign Minister Dino Grandi on his visit to the city in 1931. Anti-Fascist sentiment flared hotly at the time. A young demonstrator who leaped aboard the minister's car was sentenced to a jail term.

The attorney was serving his second term as head of the sons of Italy. At his last election, the term of office was increased from two to four years.

John M. Di Silvestro is well known in Bristol and has visited here on a number of occasions. He has paid frequent visits to the Sons of Italy of Bristol.

Two Automobiles Strike Two Men; Now in Hospital

Two men were injured in two separate accidents in this section last evening, but each was struck by an automobile as they walked along a thoroughfare.

The injured are: Charles Motz, 600 Bath street, lacerations of head requiring four stitches; lacerations of ear, knee, both legs, and finger of left hand.

Ignatius Sullivan, laceration of top of head, in which two stitches were taken.

Motz had left his Bath street residence and was walking across the street when struck by an automobile driven by Albert Glass, Durham Road. Sullivan was injured when struck as he walked along a thoroughfare near Torredale. The driver of the car was Clifford Hughes, a chauffeur for Mrs. A. W. Keeler.

Both Motz and Sullivan were treated at Harriman Hospital.

In opening the evening's speaking program, Mr. Coe said the club stood for constructive, rather than destructive criticism, and he related some of the things that add to the value of a town as a place of residence, in the eyes of a prospective resident.

W. A. Thomas, principal of the Langhorne-Middletown schools, told of conditions there, and of the need of caring for many more pupils than at present, after next year, which will require sending some of the pupils away, enlarging the school, or arranging for part time sessions.

The business session followed a turkey supper at the Methodist Church.

PLAN "SLAVE" INVESTIGATION

Phila., Jan. 28.—A threat of Grand Jury investigation and a sweeping Federal inquiry into the white slave commerce, hung over Philadelphia today as authorities sought a solution of Thursday night's triple murder in the heart of the old tenderloin district. There was evidence, authorities said, that an outbreak of war between rival vice barons, was responsible for the ruthless slaying in a disorderly house of two women and a policeman and the wounding of a third woman. Judge Howard Davis, in charge of the January Grand Jury, intimated an alliance existed between the police and the underworld. "If I find any evidence of collusion," he warned, "I shall act immediately."

TRAVEL CLUB IS TOLD OF THE OLD BRISTOL HOMES

Doron Green Continues His Historic Talk of Last Season

TELLS OF THE STREETS

Program for Members and Guests Followed By A Tea

"Old Bristol Homes" was the title of an address given before Bristol Travel Club by Doron Green yesterday afternoon when club members and their friends gathered for a bi-weekly meeting.

The program in charge of Mrs. Griffith L. Williams was followed by tea and a social hour.

Mr. Green began his address by reviewing briefly the early history of streets, and then took up the thread of the story where he had dropped it last year when he spoke before the club.

Mr. Green told that the Silbert House was standing in 1829 when it was sold at a sheriff's sale to Dr. John Phillips. A few years later it was purchased by Benjamin Blinn, who opened a temperance hotel. The speaker followed the rise of the temperance movement in Bristol from the opening of the last century and said that by 1850 it had reached such momentum that meetings were held in Institute Hall, at the corner of Radcliffe and Market streets, and in a tent upon a lot, opposite the Water Works, Blinn's adventure, he said, was far in advance of the times and died for want of patronage, although it marked the beginning of a militant crusade which found its consummation in the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment.

The Fabian home was standing in 1834 when it was purchased by Samuel Swain, Sr. It was probably used as a school house prior to 1834. Mr. Swain built the adjoining house. The Kraft home was built by a bricklayer named Small, from New York, and was later purchased by Jonathan Thomas. The Evans' residence was erected by Elizabeth Paxson. Jonathan Thomas built the home in between, making it a triple house.

Thomas S. Jett's home was built by Thomas Kennedy an ex-sheriff of Bucks County and the first superintendent of the Delaware Division of the Pennsylvania canal. The speaker told of the changes which took place in Radcliffe street, when the canal was opened. He gave the location of the coal wharves along the river front and told of the prosperity which the canal brought to the town. While many of the early home builders were not residents of the town, but were interested from a speculative standpoint, the boom which started in Radcliffe St. real estate in 1847, was a local matter in which those who had acquired wealth in the prosperous years which followed the opening of the canal, alone took a part.

The speaker stated that two homes upon the street which had been erected in 1847, namely those of Mrs. Martin and the home next to Dr. Wagner's hospital, and the home now occupied by the Sisters of St. Mark's Church, were stations of the Underground Railroad, which was in operation before the Civil War, and that many an escaped slave, on his way to Canada and freedom, found a refuge in these old homes.

The home of Dr. Lehman was built by a gentleman named Magoffin. The early deeds which are in the possession of the Lehman's contain the signatures of Anthony Burton and Thomas Brock, the founders of the town of Bristol. Mr. Magoffin was a Bible student and would gather the canal boatmen together down at the basin on Sunday afternoons and preach to them.

The home now owned by Mrs. David O. Taylor was built by Samuel Swain, Jr. Mr. Swain was in the real estate business and he and Walter Lang purchased the farm on the West side of Otter street below Bath, and laid out Swain, Linden, Locust, Maple, Pearl, Green and Mifflin streets. Mr. Swain was probably the greatest poet who ever lived within the confines of Bucks County.

Dr. J. Fred Wagner's hospital was built by a maiden lady named Jenks. A brother named Captain Jenks lived with her. He was eccentric and his life was made miserable by the prank played upon him by the boys of that period. The home where George Hussey lives, was built by Daniel Forst. He served several terms as Burgess, and his wife was one of the charter members of the First Baptist Church. Their daughter became the wife of Samuel Swain, Jr., and the Baptist Church receives the income from a legacy left by Martha P. Swain.

In reviewing the history of the old homes, Mr. Green would tell how the older families were united by marriage, thus greatly increasing the interest in his narrative by combining genealogy and history.

FATE OF THE CRITIC

The world that is so crafty and so smug has a way of dealing with those who lash it—its satirists and cynics. It honors them, with many editions, with standard biographies, with a place in history and with monuments and niches in halls of fame. Behind these things it goes its own way. Its game is a slick one and a double one.

Deny the satirist a public and his message is of no avail. Give him one and he is as helpless. One cannot but admire the world in a way for that. What an infinite capacity it has for taking pains, what a splendid tough skin that has easily endured so many years and so many assaults, what an ability, to use the jargon of the prize ring, for "absorbing punishment." All so neatly. All as though it knew where it was going and didn't want to be bothered. It is like the magician of Norse mythology who, when struck by Thor's hammer, was nearly riven, yet yawned and asked, "Did an acorn fall?"

The world likes its great men of thought and vision. It will do anything for them but follow or heed them, save in its own time, on its own terms.

Satire is both a duty and a pleasure for the satirist. But not even such masters of satire as Swift and Voltaire probably deceived themselves into thinking they were ever taken seriously by any large number. Those who think differently from his look for the proverbial tongue in the cheek, and the few who sense the truth in the satire have a happy faculty of applying the picture to all but themselves.

NO HOPE

Philadelphia is the city of brotherly love and yet its medical men would deny a brother a little hope although the brother's need is great and the needy brothers many.

Hope springs eternal in the bald head, and forever shall in spite of the discouragements held forth by spokesmen for the Philadelphia County Medical Society.

These professional "wet blankets" contend that 50 per cent of all men start losing hair before they are 30 years old, and nothing that 50 out of every hundred can do will conserve or restore the falling hairs. Hair grows in a healthy scalp, but how to make scalps healthy the doctors confess they know not.

In a moment of iconoclasm they break a few popular superstitions. They don't believe that singing or frequent cutting stops falling hair, nor do they believe in hair restorers, nor in shaving the head after a fever to save the hair. And to give the grandmothers the shock of their lives, they aver that removing the so-called milk crust from infant scalps does not affect the hair.

Civic pride, plus a cow pasture, plus a sign, equals a landing field.

When a man leads a double life he cuts down on one of them.

You can't argue with a man who won't argue back, or with a woman who does.

The trouble with following the straight and narrow path is that there are too many broad and inviting detours.

U. S. Marine Corps Threatened by Economy Bill

Colorful Fighting Force That Backed Uncle Sam's Arguments All Over the World May Be Further Whittled, but Slashing Move Is Being Bitterly Opposed.

"AND THE SITUATION IS WELL IN HAND"

As an economy measure, a bill shortly to be introduced in the House of Representatives would still further reduce the numerical strength of the United States Marine Corps, admittedly the finest body of fighting men, pound for pound, in the world. During the past four years, the corps has been depleted by cuts in personnel until to date the total reduction amounts to 24½ per cent. Apart from the sentiment that surrounds the picturesque fighting body, it is a debatable question as to whether Uncle Sam can afford to weaken his national bulwarks at this time—even if we are just a bit hard up. Representative Fred Britten of Illinois is the leader of a movement to fight the bill which would cut the strength of the Marine Corps from its present 15,343 to 13,600. He has the support of Major General Ben H. Fuller, Commandant of the Corps, as well as that of other high ranking Naval officers. These opponents of the bill point to the enviable record of the Marines. Since their formation as a fighting unit in 1776, the Corps has covered its colors with glory in many parts of the world. No later than last year, the sight that was breathed on all sides when news of the Japanese invasion of Shanghai reached this country was "Thank heavens the marines are on the job." The work of the corps in South America is so well remembered that 99 per cent of Americans will agree with Marine Corps supporters who say "By all means let's have economy, but why pick on the Marines?"

THE CHALLENGE OF LOVE

by WARWICK DEEPIING

CHAPTER FIFTY-FIVE

Mary Mascall vanished up the darkening stairs. She had to grope her way along the landing. A faint chink of light showed her the door of Jess's room. She opened it softly, and spoke in a whisper.

"John."

"Yes, Mother?"

"Mr. Flemming wants to see you."

"What about?"

"Navestock. Go down and speak to him. I ask you to do it, John. It's only fair to him and to yourself."

The two men met in the dusk of the hall. Wolfe's face looked gaunt and grey—a hungry face, yet fervent, and fanatical about the eyes. He gripped Robert Flemming's hand hard.

"She is asleep now. I can give you ten minutes. It is just touch and go, the weight of a feather in the scales."

"I am going to speak out frankly, Wolfe."

"The franker the better."

"To-day we elected you our Medical Officer. Threadgold has resigned. You have won your way. Don't sacrifice a fine opportunity."

He saw Wolfe's profile as they turned, gaunt and clear against a hard sky.

"You think I am acting selfishly?"

"I think that no man should put his private interests before the interests of his—his—you know what I mean. There is a good deal of feeling in the town. I came as a friend."

Wolfe's eyes looked into the grey distance. His face was very stern.

"For three months I have given Navestock the very blood of my body. They begrudge me three days. I shall not leave Moor Farm until we have either lost or won."

"I think you are wrong."

"You are one of the few men, Mr. Flemming, to whom I would surrender, if it were possible."

"Would this girl wish you to do this, if she were capable of judging?"

Wolfe faced round almost fiercely.

"She has more courage and generosity than twenty Navestocks. It was she who kept me here. I should have kicked the dust off my boots last year if she had not backed me up. 'Stay and fight,' she said. I stayed. If Navestock owes me anything, it owes it to her. All this here is a matter of nursing. I would trust no one but myself. They want me to give her a worse chance. They can go to perdition."

It was dark still when Wolfe left Jess sleeping, slipped out of the room and made his way downstairs. In the recess under the stairs he found his overcoat and boots. He fastened the porch door and smelt the keen fresh smell of a winter morning.

The night had been critical, and the day would be in sympathy with the night. Wolfe felt tired and heavy-headed, with a hot ache in the eyes and dull blood in the brain. Strength of will alone had kept him awake, with his whole body thirsting for sleep as a dry land thirsts for rain.

Mary Mascall put her work aside, and went quickly to the parlour window. The heads of two black horses had passed across the gap in the holly hedge where the garden gate opened. Mary Mascall could see the shining hat and the red face of the coachman, and the slim figure of a young footman standing stiff and erect, and pressing the gate open.

"Bless me, Mrs. Brandon!"

Mary Mascall hurried to the porch door. She opened it as Ursula Mascall was stretching out a hand to the bell-pull.

"Good morning, Mrs. Mascall. I have come to ask after our lost nurse."

"I wanted to see you, so I asked Mrs. Mascall to send you down to me," said Ursula Brandon.

"She is much better, thank you."

"I am so glad to hear it."

There was no apparent reason why these two women should feel uneasy under each other's eyes, yet some vague feminine antipathy woke at the very meeting of their voices. The one was casual, calm, cold on the surface; the other, ruddy, warm-voiced, mellowly vivacious. The blue eyes of the farmer's wife took on a queer surface-gleam of watchfulness.

"You are sure that she is out of danger? In a way, I have felt myself responsible."

"Dr. Wolfe is very much more hopeful."

"That is a good sign—to have one's doctor convinced. Is Mr. Wolfe here, by any chance?"

She maintained her level, casual calm under the full stare of Mary Mascall's shrewd blue eyes.

"I will send Dr. Wolfe to you."

"Thank you so much."

When Wolfe came out to her she met him with the easy friendliness of a woman of the world. Mary Mascall had remained with Jess, and there was no questioning and mistrustful feminine spirit to be dealt with, merely a blundering thing called man whose methods were like trampled elephant tracks through the jungle.

"I am so glad to hear that she is out of danger."

"There is still some danger."

"Of course there must be. I wanted to see you, so I asked Mrs. Mascall to send you down to me. When are you going to remember that there is such a place as Navestock?"

"I am giving myself two more days."

She smiled at him, and the smile puzzled Wolfe. It suggested so many subtle mental attitudes. Her whole presence hinted at clearer, broader skies. She was so much more mature, so much more complex, so much more casual.

"Don't you think that you could deny yourself these two days? I suggest it as a friend. I think the patience of the people in the valley is very nearly exhausted."

She gave a slight shrug of the shoulders.

"Oh, you proud and sincere spirits! Don't you know that one learns to humour fools and to triumph over them by smiling over their folly? Drive down with me now. My carriage can bring you back again."

He stared beyond her for the moment, but his face remained obstinate.

"No, I stand by my promise to myself."

He accompanied her down the stone path to the gate, and saw her into her carriage.

"Give my love to Jess."

"I will."

"Try and relent towards the grumblers at the end of your two days. Good-bye."

Wolfe's spirit of inexorable independence was to bear the brunt of a second and more strenuous attack in the course of the same day. The two carriages must have passed each other on the way, that of Mrs. Ursula Brandon going towards "Pardons," Josiah Crabbe's hired fly climbing up from Navestock.

As usual, Josiah Crabbe had all his news from Adam Grinch, and even the old cynic had been alarmed at the outcry Wolfe's absence had aroused. The town had turned like an uncertain-tempered dog. Infamous neglect of duty, an audacious hardihood that went out of its way to flaunt the public opinion that had consented to be taken by the nose! The gossip of the river alleys said that Jess Mascall had never been in danger. John Wolfe had just taken himself off to show his masterful independence, and his contempt for public opinion.

"You wicked fool, to have let a pair of soft arms get round your neck. Man, you are spoiling everything. We had them beaten, we had them cornered, and now you play the womanish fool."

His bright, dark eyes flashed at Wolfe out of the yellow thinness of his angry face. The energy of his impatience burned at white heat in his shrunken body. Affection and scorn were curiously mingled.

"Turrell has been back in the town a week. What, you hadn't heard? They are working against you. They have got old Baggelay's nephew down from London, a smart young whipper-snapper, with a bagful of diplomas. Partnership with Threadgold; pushed through on the sly. Turrell has been fathering young Baggelay, trotting him round, mixing up soft-soap. There has been a dinner-party at Beech Hill. It's as plain as the palm of my hand, and very clever."

HOLLYWOOD Give as more leading men, cry the producers of Hollywood.

The shortage is so acute at RKO that Joel McCrea probably will be drafted to play opposite Ann Harding as well as Constance Bennett. This was admitted yesterday by Radio officials who have scanned Hollywood for a suitable masculine lead in "De-classee."

Joel fills the bill, of course, but there was the question of conflicting schedules between the pictures of RKO's two leading feminine stars. With Connie Bennett still working on "Our Betters," however, the studio heads figure they can finish with Joel in "De-classee" before he is needed for "Bed of Roses."

The prospect of so much work isn't bothering the tall young actor a bit. I talked with him yesterday, and he is enjoying a brief vacation here in Los Angeles.

The waitresses at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer commissary were very much interested in George Raft, who visited the Culver City

Plant the other day for a talk with Jimmy Durante and Gary Cooper. Later on they went out to see Howard Hawks direct Joan Crawford in a scene from "Today We Live."

Here's an item. They have not given up "Sanctuary," after all, at Paramount. To the contrary, it will be a special, and will start in a fortnight. George is to have a role, so is Miriam Hopkins, and there is a strong likelihood that Frederic March will play a lead.

HIGH SCHOOL TEAMS WIN TWO VICTORIES

By Oscar Corn
(H. S. Press Representative)

The Bristol High five and sextet easily defeated the Yardley teams, last night, on the local high school court. The "Strangers" handed the Yardley quintet a 23 to 8 set-back, while Coach Diemer's proteges won 26 to 19.

Both games were very slow and it was very noticeable that Bristol always had the upper hand. In the boys' game the Strangers were so over-confident that the visitors held them down to eight points in the first half, themselves getting five. Bristol came back strong in the third quarter, getting seventeen points to Yardley's none.

In the girls' game Bristol displayed a very fine passing attack, which kept the visitors baffled and kept the ball in their territory during most of the game.

Bornice scored most for Bristol, getting six twin-pointers, while Dougherty and Eisenbrey led the visitors in the boys' game.

Dugan took the scoring laurels for the local sextet, with eighteen points, while Doan scored most for the Yardley team.

SIGN NEW PLAYER

The Paterson Parchment Paper Company basketball five has signed Frank Frankovic, brother of Joseph Frankovic who is at the present time pivot man for the Paper Makers. The new Paterson player is six foot, two inches and will make his debut against the Third Ward five on Monday night.

THE other day two old-time cue experts... Jacob (Cat) Hellings and Harry (Zeb) Hibbs... settled an argument of long standing between them as to who was the best pool player... the scene of the contest was Brascia's billiard room on Otter street... and the place was filled with admirers of both men to watch the game... things looked bad for Hibbs for a while as "Cat" had a lead of four balls up until the last frame... then "Zeb" made a run of seven balls, winning by the score of 50 to 47.

We understand the "Elks" are going to conduct a pool tournament among their members very soon, and later invite other organizations to participate in a town tourney for the Boro Championship.

While on the subject of pool we are informed that "Bill" Rockhill, manager of the Bristol Sand & Gravel Co., was a hot cue manipulator in the old days... trimming the best players around Morrisville and Trenton... and Elwood Minster, "Popsy" Allen and "Matt" Lincoln were also about the best at that game around Bristol a number of years back.

"Herbie" Lawrence, who plays a forward position on the Y. M. A. basketball team in the Bristol League, is the talk of the town by virtue of his wonderful floor work and accurate field goal shooting... young Lawrence, who starred with Germantown Academy and Pennsylvania University teams... is a tall rangy player with a wonderful disposition... he never seems to get ruffled during the course of a game... and is the idol of the league... we believe he is the high scorer of the local circuit.

THE CLASSIFIED Section offers a complete catalogue of the wants and offers of the people of Bristol and lower Bucks county.

VON SCHLEICHER RESIGNS

Berlin, Germany, Jan. 28.—Denied dictatorial powers by President Von Hindenburg, Lieutenant-General Kurt Von Schleicher, resigned as Chancellor of the Reich today, his resignation once more paving the way for the possible appointment of Adolph Hitler, fiery Nazi leader, as Chancellor. Von Schleicher and his cabinet of aristocrats stepped out of office when Von Hindenburg declined to accord the militaristic Chancellor power to dissolve for fear of an open break on the floor of Parliament.

Selection of Textbooks, Clarity in Giving Facts, Discussions

AIDS SCHOOL CHILDREN

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 28.—(INS)—Careful selection of textbooks, clarity in the presentation of facts by teachers, and group discussions are responsible for the elimination of false ideas, myths, and superstitions from the minds of school children, in the opinion of Dr. D. R. Sumstine, director of public school curriculum study in Pittsburgh.

Dr. Sumstine rejoiced over the eradication of eight popular beliefs that science heretofore had disproved. As a result, children have not become too bold, but they are better informed, he explained.

The unfounded beliefs that are rapidly being doomed by present-day school instruction are:

A child is influenced by what its mother sees or touches before the child is born.
Birth marks are caused by what a mother sees or touches before her child is born.
In former times the average length of human life was much longer than now.
Fai persons are always good-natured.
Mental disorders are caused by overstudy.
Children of first cousins, though of good parentage, are likely to be feeble-minded.
Heavy growth of hair on a person's limbs and chest indicates great physical strength.
Evolution implies that men are descended from apes.

Helene's Successor

By BURNLEY

Lenore KIGHT

--- of Homestead, Pa. ---
SENSATIONAL NEW SWIMMING STAR, WHO LOOMS AS
HELENE MADISON'S SUCCESSOR.

WHEN Miss Helene Madison won both women's free-style races in the Olympic swimming events last summer, she merely did what was expected of her. Miss Madison had cracked all the women's free-style records in sight, and she was supposed to be unbeatable. Her double Olympic triumph, therefore, was no surprise. The real surprise came in the fact that Helene so narrowly escaped defeat in both races, being extended to the limit by two heretofore little known swimmers.

In the shorter race, Miss Madison just managed to nose out the 15-year-old Dutch prodigy, Miss Willy den Ouden; while over the longer distance she had her hands full to stave off the closing rush of Miss Lenore Kight, of Homestead, Pa.

Now that the marvelous Helene has turned professional, it seems certain that her successor will be the aforementioned Lenore Kight. Miss Kight attracted quite a bit of attention earlier in the summer of 1932 when she gave Miss Madison a bad scare in the Olympic tryouts, putting on such a terrific burst of speed near the finish of the race that she almost overtook the famous Seattle speedster.

Those who saw Miss Kight in that race began to pass the word around that she would be beating the great Madison within a year's time. If the race in the Olympic tryouts had been a few feet longer, Lenore would have passed the champion, as she was overtaking her with every stroke as they came down the home stretch.

Well, Miss Madison managed to nose out the sensational Homestead girl in the Olympics, and then Helene forsook amateur swimming to accept a movie contract, so Miss Kight won't have another chance to defeat her. But Helene's records are still up there for Lenore to shoot at, and if she can surpass those marvelous marks she must be ranked as the greatest woman swimmer of all time.

Already, within the past two months this new aquatic marvel has smashed a couple of Helene's records—marks that were expected to stand for many years to come. Georgia Coleman, who was down in Florida when Miss Kight was smashing the marks, said that there was no fluke about it and that they were two good records that Lenore had beaten.

"Keep your eye on this girl," advised the blonde diving champion "You're going to hear a lot about her during 1933."
